Moved

by Angela Alaimo O'Donnell in the November 12, 2014 issue

Life smooths us, perfects as does the river the stone, and there is no place our Beloved is not flowing, though the current's force you may not like.

—St. Teresa of Ávila

This rounding roughs us even as it smooths, the force of God's water strong, tumbles the small stones even as it soothes and carries them lightly along, The rain falls full and fills the streams. The river drinks their love. The trees bend heavy with dreams. There's nothing that does not move.

Borne along by fire and flood, by wind that tongues and grooves, our bodies brimmed with blood that feeds us as it proves perfection is no steady state. It's on the way and always late.