Saved

by Warren L. Molton in the August 17, 2016 issue

No longer priest, he saves it as that one necessary cry to bless or curse in some wide-eyed moment of nightmare or victory, kept among words needed for the short breaths, last lines, those door-slamming, throat-closing, consonantal end-words cried in rage, pain, or love's ecstasy . . . down, down to this one word left in heart's chamber kept secret like a last saved bullet: God!
