Wednesday digest

May 29, 2013

Subscribe by RSS feed: magazine, blogs, news. See all feeds.

New today from the Century:

- The Century's new reader survey—with a chance to win a free book
- Matt Fitzgerald and Christian Wiman talk about God: "We aren't the first people to experience God as the slice and the stitches at the exact same time. The paradox is ancient. Jesus embodied it." (susbcription required)
- Raymond Haberski Jr. on presidents and the moral accounting of war
- John Buchanan on commencement ceremonies: "Graduation season reminds me that you can do a whole lot worse than give your heart to a college." (subscription required)
- o "Answers," a poem by Deborah Shore
- Carol Howard Merritt highlights an interview with Cameron Trimble

In the news:

- Gay Catholic priest comes out to an uncertain future
- Southern Baptist Richard Land passes baton to Russell Moore