New today from the Century:

- Beth Felker Jones on the demise of the Purple Pie Man: "My school-aged self was intrigued by the Purple Pie Man. Since then, kids' TV has spun off in two directions: more violence for boys, threatless universes for girls."
- Sarah Azaransky on the civil rights movement and the global community
- Greg Carey reviews Geza Vermes, who "provides a compelling sketch of the charismatic trajectory in ancient Judaism and locates Jesus within that pattern." (subscription required)
- Carol Howard Merritt on technology and ethics

In the news:

- Conservatives promote House bill to protect opponents of gay marriage
- Assault on professor part of wave of attacks on Sikhs, Muslims, others
- United Methodist high court to consider challenges to gay teachings
