Read THE COW IS NOW said the child

by Warren L. Molton in the December 21, 2016 issue The cow is now. Lowing and chewing, no mewing or bowing to spring like that upon a rat. The cow's no cat. In grass to eat or stream to drink, the cow's a statue against the sky. Her great head still, her eyes staring at you, she parks. A dog remembers you, and barks, but the vacant-eyed cow is only now I mean she lives right now, she's in it this minute. She takes a stand, and wouldn't give a fig to do a jig. The cow's no pig. Yet, some nights after milking, soon as the sun sinks and the farm sleeps, in the lull till dawn she'll yawn, then take a great run and sail clear over the moon like a gull over a dune. How? Who knows? She just says, "NOW!" and goes.
