Ash Wednesday: The morning after

by Marjorie Maddox in the February 14, 2018 issue

All morning, I return to the poem, to the word's ash, the self smoldering, and the slow burn of mourning. I return with sacred words that turn night's bloody gash into morning. O, self, return to his poem: the ash of the world rising with returning words: mourning and morning.