Agni Dei

by Carl Winderl in the January 27, 2021 issue

Isaac without spot or blemish about to be slain lay there before Him trussed up, in trust his father's arm poised the death angel hovering near, thoughts racing, fear of the known, and the unknown; but neither squirm, nor blanch did I see in Him pinioned there, nary a tremble in His lips while He looked upon His stabat mater . . .

While

to me He whispered His job-like words

: though He may kill Me yet will I trust Him
