

The newest agon for grief

by Peter Cooley in the October 20, 2021 issue

—in memoriam, Jacqueline Cooley, 1944–2018

Pray for me, I asked the trees.
Or did I order them? Or just stand still while the wind bore its song among the branches carrying us both forward, backward, forward, marrying us to morning light.

In the grief-room-tangle of my hands folded together to confront the day, I've found all things necessary to construct a life,
a few blues notes or a new agon to slip on.

I've come to myself as a new man—again, broken in all the new places, over and over,
pieced together by the gods,
then broken, pieced, one of the pieces in this fist I've opened and re-opened writing this.