Ink

by Philip C. Kolin in the May 4, 2022 issue

We are made of ink and into ink we shall perish. Our history survives in fire soot and boneblack pigment.

Carbon fingerprints tell our telling and dust writes to dust as we make our voices heard on papyrus, vellum, paper. Ink gyves our identities in gall and gum. Ink gives us life then consigns to death. Church registries say that once we were here.

But even as our names fade in ink, they will be read in the Lamb's book without fear of blot or blur.
