Summer Twilight

by Bonnie Thurston in the September 2022 issue

"Make every effort to live in eternity's light, not in time."

—May Sarton

This is more easily done in summer's long gloaming when I read on the porch until the light goes as it does earlier in this little valley than on its encircling ridges. I listen to the soundtrack of wrens warbling arias apparently for the joy of it, watch militant pugilism of kamikaze hummingbirds at a feeder so close the whirr of tiny wings ruffles the herbs below it. Frequently does bring their fawns and friends to feast at the green profusion on the hill I refuse to tame because it opens a door to timeless aliveness, invites me to love what is for its own sake, and because in every moment, eternity's light dawns.
