Trespasses

by Gary Sledge in the May 3, 2005 issue

Among small things there are no boundaries Not the sparrow, but the spot the sparrrow leaves Between the shaking limb, the sunlight and the trees

Beetles discard themselves as husks Even galaxies pass right through one another Not us, not we middle beings

We own and occupy, stack stones at borders We find what we lack everywhere and lack Everything we find, wanting everything

I wait until you are asleep and warm
To touch your hip, and voice your name
To ascertain whether you are there—or only I remain