For D.

by Christian Wiman in the September 9, 2008 issue

Groans going all the way up a young tree Half-cracked and caught in the crook of another Cease. All around the hill-ringed, heavened pond Leaves shush themselves like an audience.

An atomic pause, as of some huge attention Bearing down. May I hold your hand?

A clutch of mayflies banqueting on oblivion Writhes above the water like visible light.
