

Prodigal

by Julie L. Moore in the May 5, 2009 issue

The farmer has shown up with the sun, the two conspiring to work the land together.

It's May. Time for blades to dig in.
Furrow a fresh start.

And you'd like to join in. You'd like to whistle the sun over to you like an obedient dog, tell it to sit, right there, and stay while you seek forgiveness. For too long, you've been trapped, burrowing with your bare hands tunnel after dead-end tunnel, stubborn, refusing to change direction as you search for the yellow face of escape to glow before your eyes, unveil the mysterious egress. Go.

You can see it now. Turn your hands over like the dirt at your knees, the soil on that field. And go.

Leave your flashlight behind.