What in the wind

Poetry in the April 20, 2010 issue

This was a gale that formed a fist, a punch turning into a full kick that almost sent me flying downhill. The Greek word translates as "a movement of air." But this was karate; I loved the force of it, its full release and enthusiasm.

In my tedium, I wish I might keel over when that other spirit blows, or that that fierce, holy breath would fill me to almost-bursting, a red balloon buoyant with air, pressure inside and out, and no strings attached.
