To manifest and manifest

by Peter Cooley in the September 21, 2010 issue

To be open to receive the spirit.

Easily said: just writing down these words.

But it may not come as we would have it in some Byzantine icon of the Christ,

Buddha rotund in my neighbor's yard,

a thousand Muslim men salaamed in prayer.

It may have to appear in ugliness.

Today out of a sky black, cold and hard as onyx I still had the vision come.

It was the bird we all call tomorrow.

You know the one: you saw it as a child.

It came to you the first dawn you saw light and found the word for it: the huge not-you.

You stood up in your crib. It spoke to you.
