of all the Woulds

by Carl Winderl in the January 22, 2014 issue

My Son could have ridden and shed blood upon mahogany, ebony, maple, elm, oak, fir, poplar, banyan, teak, palm, bamboo, juniper, sequoia, hawthorn, dogwood, magnolia, crab, evergreen, balsa, birch, ficus, peach, cherry, pear, persimmon, or apple

the most common one He'd allow for Himself to be spread-eagled on would be yew.
