Blind faith

by Richard Schiffman in the October 29, 2014 issue

Even after years living with the blind, guide dogs continue gazing into the dead fish of their owner's eyes. The dogs are not stupid. They simply see what eyes can't see behind the bloodless husk of facts. And soon enough, their guileless trust awakens something in the blind: not sight, exactly, but the cognizance that they are seen—which is another kind of seeing—call it faith, blind faith.
