

Thursday digest

November 3, 2011

Subscribe by RSS feed: magazine, blogs, news. See all feeds.

New today from the Century:

- Gary Dorrien on the case against Wall Street: "The protesters sleeping in the cold do not claim that 99 percent of Americans agree with them. Their point is that the top 1 percent plays by different rules." (subscription required)
- Dorrien talks to Century executive editor David Heim: "The sheer diversity of the gatherings makes the point that a great many people from nearly all walks of life are fed up with the system and with typical liberal attempts to reform it."
- Steve Thorngate posts about Benjamin Dueholm's new articles for both the Century and the Washington Monthly
- Steve Vineberg reviews Dream House: "Though the movie is confused, it contains beautifully conceived sequences that suggest a genuine vision." (subscription required)

In the news:

- Amid tense relations, Ireland closes embassy to the Vatican
- Catching up with Archbishop Desmond Tutu
- 'Bishops' marriage guy' blames devil for homosexuality
- Religious leaders lobby Congress on foreign aid
- A popular analogy that doesn't always work