Friday digest

November 4, 2011

Subscribe by RSS feed: magazine, blogs, news. See all feeds.

New today from the Century:

- John Buchanan on CEO pay: "Over 20 years, the CEO pay multiple went up 1,000 percent. Former bank CEO William J. McDonough calls this 'grotesquely immoral.'" (subscription required)
- Marily McEntyre reviews Julie Anderson Love: "After her bleak diagnosis, Julie Anderson Love learned that hope has nothing to do with passivity. She was, she writes, 'the patient from hell.'" (subscription required)
- William Willimon summarizes the gospel in seven words: "God refuses to be God without us."
- David Heim on George Will: "Will's earlier brand of conservatism was a lively conversation partner for liberals who are inclined to lapse into an individualism of their own and to turn issues of substantive good into questions of mere procedural justice."
- Steve Thorngate on the White House biblical-literacy flap: " It's annoying to see the president's fascinating invocation of God on the stump overshadowed by another story about biblical illiteracy in high places."

In the news:

- Atheists thrive at Cal Lutheran
- At religious campuses, atheist groups operate underground
- Marriage adviser resigns over Satan-homosexuality column