Wednesday digest

January 11, 2012

Subscribe by RSS feed: magazine, blogs, news. See all feeds.

New today from the Century:

- Jesse James DeConto on a small group for debtors: "When Scott Sorrentino's church started talking about a new "debt annihilation" program, his ears perked up." (subscription required)
- Adam Copeland highlights secular calls for something like sabbath: "Do today's main advocates of sabbath (or "quiet," "rest," "time away," whatever you call it) approach it from a spiritual-but-not-religious perspective?"
- Lou Carlozo reviews the latest Coldplay album: "Mylo Xyloto strives to be melodic and grandiose, thoughtful and commercial, a big seller but not a sellout. It's the artistic equivalent of trying to serve Zeus and mammon, and it doesn't come without risks." (subscription required)
- Steve Thorngate posts Lutheran Satire's flowchart on how to determine what denomination you are

In the news:

- Is Rick Santorum a Catholic or an evangelical? Yes.
- Traveling repairmen help rebuild churches
- Ugandan Anglican leader has drawn both praise and criticism