

Tuesday digest

December 18, 2012

Subscribe by RSS feed: magazine, blogs, news. See all feeds.

New today from the Century:

- J. B. Stump on faith and science: "We might still pray for rain, but we can account for thunder without invoking bowling gods. Is there still a place for God?" (subscription required)
- James McGrath on the Connecticut shooting, school prayer and the religious right's god
- Why there is no elf on Lee Hull Moses's shelf
- Gracia Grindal's lectionary column for Sunday, December 30 (subscription required)

In the news:

- In Newtown churches, many questions - and tears - but few answers
- Newtown shootings renew questions about evil and suffering
- Is 'The Hobbit' a 'Christian' film? Yes and no.
- At Christmas, the babe in the manger isn't always white
- WCC blasts U.S. for blocking ecumenical meeting in Cuba