

- First step—Create a graffiti wall. We write down all of the cares/concerns/dreams/ideas that we carry into the conference.
- Second step—Host discussions on particular topics.
- Third step—If there's a particular project that needs further fleshing out, then we hold a planning session to decide who/what/how it's going to happen.
- Fourth step—Report back to the group.
- Fifth step—Stay in contact with one another, encouraging one another throughout the year.

Unlike a lot of conferences, we talk about where people are, so subjects might be, "How do I close my church?" "My church can't afford a full-time salary any longer, how do I transition into bi-vocational ministry?" "What am I going to do about health insurance?" "How do I get a new church started?" "How can I minister with the homeless?"

Or it might be around the general interest of the participants. There might be sessions on Geek church (what does Star Trek and the church have in common? I have no idea... I missed the session.). The Beatitudes. Contextual Bible study. Spraypainting liturgy. Making bread. Engaging in spiritual practices with cracked pots (literal pots!). Addiction and grace. How to write, publish, and market a book. How to start a publishing company. How to raise money for non-traditional ministries.

We have dreamed about social justice issues, experimenting with how we can leverage our social media voices for particular causes. And we have worked to establish food ministries.

Through UNCO, and with UNCO connections, we've seen many projects start—Liturgy Link, the PW Facebook page, a new church development, book projects—and there are many things that are still in the works. We worship and pray a lot. We have a not-so-silent auction to support existing, creative ministries, like Love Wins.

But, most of all, the beautiful thing that has come out of this conference has been the incredible support network. The people in UNCO are the people I call when I'm in the midst of a crisis. They are the colleagues who show up to help me move, who text me when my dad is in hospice, who support our family as we start new ministries. They are the ones who remind me constantly to keep writing and inspire to keep working. Each time I'm part of a gathering, I look around at all creativity, imagination, passion, and love, I know that the church is going to be just fine.

If you're interested in attending, we'll be at Stony Point in New York on June 10-12 and San Francisco Theological Seminary on October 21-23. Please contact me if you have any questions. I'm on Facebook, Twitter, or you can contact me through my website.
