Thursday digest

May 30, 2013

Subscribe by RSS feed: magazine, blogs, news. See all feeds.

New today from the Century:

- Kathryn Reklis on the Bluths' school for virtue: "Arrested Development is back, and family dysfunction is on display. But family may also be the characters' chance to break free from paralyzing narcissism."
- Walter Brueggemann reviews Lance Pape (subscription required)
- Ben Dueholm on the New New Testament: "Hal Taussig's council amounts to a parody of the conspiracy-theory version of early church history. Even Dan Brown's Nicaea was more populous and cosmopolitan."
- Steve Thorngate on the farm bill

In the news:

- One Scouts ban remains intact: Atheists
- o 'Nuns on the Bus' kick off immigration tour