Friday digest

September 20, 2013

Subscribe by RSS feed: magazine, blogs, news. See all feeds.

New today from the Century:

- John Burgess on Lutherans and Methodists in Russia: "The resurgence of religious life since the collapse of communism has greatly benefited the Orthodox Church. Protestant churches are few and far between." (subscription required)
- Amy Frykholm talks to Dietrich Brauer, archbishop of the Evangelical Lutheran Church of Russia: "Lutheran churches in Russia have an opportunity to be a church not of priests and charismatic leaders who know all the answers, but of a living people, seeing God's righteousness amidst all the unrighteous kingdoms." (subscription required)
- Emily Heath on the inadequacy of being a "NALT" Christian ally
- Steve Thorngate on a banner week for inequality and its promoters
- Lou Carlozo briefly reviews Phil Angotti

In the news:

- o Moody Bible Institute drops alcohol and tobacco ban for employees
- o Five things we learned about Pope Francis from his blockbuster interview