

The most-read Century Blog posts

December 30, 2014

Here are the year's most-read posts by the Century editors and guest bloggers. (Listed separately: the top posts from Then & Now, the CCblogs network, Drew Hart's blog, Carol Howard Merritt's blog, and Steve Thorngate's blog.)

- 1) Do I have to take Isaiah 58:7 literally? by Celeste Kennel-Shank. Supporting nonprofits is like bringing homeless people into your own house. Right?
- 2) American Christianity in exile? by Benjamin J. Dueholm. We still enjoy a kind of wealth, prestige, institutional heft, political clout, and legal protection that would stupefy Jesus of Nazareth.
- 3) Warning: The last shall be first, by Gordon Cosby, with Rebecca Stelle. As I am dying, I am seeing in a new way. I am seeing that weakness is a gift.
- 4) Bart Ehrman is part of a legitimate, ongoing conversation, by Greg Carey. This is not about liberals and secularists attacking the church. It's an ongoing debate that crosses the usual party lines.
- 5) The quest for a common loaf, by Angela Dienhart Hancock. "Take and eat," Jesus said, passing the bread around. And everybody did—except for Philip, who went away hungry, for he was allergic to gluten.
- 6) Five comforts of monocultural church, by Amy Frykholm. In a monocultural church, you have the benefit of the illusion that everyone understands you and you understand everyone.
- 7) Why I listen to K-LOVE Radio, by Katherine Willis Pershey. I got "saved" at a Carman concert when I was 12. It wasn't the first time.
- 8) Why I stayed, name withheld. Each woman's story is different, and each woman's story is differently shattered.
- 9) Reading the Fifth Gospel, by Ruth Everhart. Why are Presbyterians so fixated on the politics of Israel? Maybe because we have no idea how else to approach this land.
- 10) Three lessons mainline pastors can take from Mark Driscoll's resignation, by L. Roger Owens. We watch from a distance with bemused smiles. But this is a cautionary tale.
- 11) Misogyny, #yesallwomen, and the role of the church, by Bromleigh McCleneghan. Each mass killing scares me. This one is harder.
- 12) My fear of the cross, by Darcey Steinke. Religion does not make me happy. It gives me tools to help me deal with myself.
- 13) Preaching with a broken heart, by McKinna Rae Daugherty. My long-time boyfriend and I recently ended our relationship. The next week, I was scheduled to preach.
- 14) Five ways churches can support families providing foster care, by Jamie Calloway-Hanauer. We often give foster parents pedestal status. But they, like the rest of us, need all the help they can get.