

Flannery & eschatology

by Angela Alaimo O'Donnell in the November 22, 2017 issue

*A truck driver driving up with a load of hay found a peacock turning before him in the middle of the road, shouted,
"Get a load of that bastard!" and braked his truck to a shattering halt.
—Flannery O'Connor, "The King of the Birds"*

It'll be like that, the Second Coming.
Making your way, laden with hay, down the same old local road, and there you are, stopped dead by Christ with no idea what to say in the face of such transforming glory. Helpless without a code to die by, tact is sacrificed and candor coughs up the words we need.
He was a bastard, truth be told,
His father being not of this world but the hidden one we just can't see until a blue-plumed vision stalls your truck leaving you blind and wonderstruck.
