

Empty

by Kelly E. Largent in the April 11, 2018 issue

Who would I be if I were empty?

a clear glass vase glittering the light an open window bare to breeze and scent a newly built nest hollowed in down a white sheet of paper spread beneath the pen a newborn's eyes slowly widening a freshly made bed, covers turned a painted canoe tapping against the pier a field in black folds, newly churned an empty stone tomb awash with morning sun, and the buried one within—gone missing.
