Vending machine theology

by Ed Zahniser in the June 20, 2018 issue

Rote prayers like coins imagined fumble toward the slot in our both dumb and blind vending machine theology. We pray them round; mumble mumble. What size had You in mind? What denomination makes doxology enough that You might grant our wish? I wish I knew maker of all precious metals multiplier of the loaves and fish and lifter of each morning's dew who made the jewelweed soothe the nettles' acid sting. Despite our primal rift will You grant us anything beyond this day itself as gift? I wish I knew. But there: It lifts, another morning dew.
