En plein air, September

by Charles Hughes in the September 12, 2018 issue

This bus stop in late sun— Bench, narrow, backless, low, In black-framed kiosk, all Metal and plexiglass, All sides enclosed but one-Today turns studio For a woman, a long haul From home, what things she has Stuffing a shopping cart, Though now her sketchbook's laid Open across her lap And chalks lead bright, discrete Realities into art. But what can be remade? Hard seasons? Not the slap That winter-back on its feet-Will naturally impart, Whatever she might trap Of the sunlight's garish fade And the end-of-summer heat.
