

Psalm 140

by Jane Simpson in the June 5, 2019 issue

I cobble—an editor at deadline—

Psalm 140 to Sonnet 140.

God, hear the voice of my supplications

Lest sorrow lend me words. And words express, gurgles, flow with bubbles, like deep-cut wounds.

Lest all my words are lamentations, old parchment ink uplifted in dark scroll script.

Lest I sleep-speak the sorrow words easy
to utter, waiting to choke and smother.

I'd like to know another language, with words that won't disappoint the sentences.

Then, I'd crack—but wouldn't break—a book's spine
to fill uncut journals with leather-bound gladness, in the pulp promise of a pine.
