

Poem

by Greg Huteson in the January 29, 2020 issue

Roomed with solitude and a tablet while zongzi steams in the rice cooker.
Dragon Boat Festival is the day after tomorrow, but this is not about that—

about water races and loyalty.
It's not about pyramids of rice or respect for the dead, although the latter is commendable, like history.

Rather, here is a white pine desk
and a plastic cup with tea stall tea.
Here's a window and the sky at dusk.
With a lone bookshelf in the glass,
there's a poem here.
