

Ghost owl

by Ned Balbo in the December 16, 2020 issue

A cellphone's flashlight beam selects your face watching from a high branch skeptically—We've found you now, ghost owl, lodged cryptically above us, grim observer. Fixed in place, you shine, a constellation pulled from space, made feather, flesh, and talon. Carelessly, our cellphone casts a cool light on your face while you look down and watch us skeptically, unruly lovers grounded, who gave chase to Tyto alba flying noiselessly. . . .

How could we hope our words, imperfectly, would capture your dark world, as if to trace a straight line to the sky, your heart-shaped face remote, your cold gaze watching skeptically?
