Mary replies to the angel, ask me again by Rebecca Edgren in the October 10, 2021 issue —not asking my earswhich like shells still surge with your silence.

Ask me this time with your tongue touching mine. Give your words to my mouth, let me swallow. Let me tongue, and taste, and spill my frail and almost unformed yes back into you. Let it grow as will the life I'll let you plant in me. So may I know as I'm consumed that some slip of me is taking root and strengthening in other soil—that whittled down I'm not diminished. My yes runs deep and rises, breaks into the bloom of your body, as yours is borne in the long unforeseeable branching of mine.