

Sonnet: You could have made by D. S. Martin in the June 1, 2022 issue

You could have made the worlds grey & lop-sided a monochrome for flora sky & sea but your precision made sure none collided you framed the tiger's fearful symmetry I learn about you from the things you've made although my thoughts are tentative at best the peace the turbulence both sun & shade & lean upon your book to learn the rest But even in your word you speak unclearly conundrums of both holy wars & grace I try to make the ways of God to merely make sense so I won't fall flat on my face It seems you'd rather prove my proofs untrue so I will turn from certainties to you
