Oh, little moth of clarity

by Spencer Clark French in the August 10, 2022 issue

Oh, little moth of clarity, why do you now hide?
In the past I knew you well—devouring every disguise, gnawing my closet to shambles, exposing the bones inside:

every truth I feared fully clarified.

I should tout your truancy or revel your retreat. Yet, for some reason, I've set out lamp tonight. Little probing, perforating brother, please, please, take flight.
