

Light Shines in Darkness

by Bonnie Thurston in the December 2022 issue

Everybody knows Christmas is good for business.
To attract the tourist trade, our town council cheerfully promotes an annual “Festival of Lights,” the lurid illumination of a normally pastoral park.

Neighborhoods take up the gauntlet, festoon with energy-guzzling lights.
In a bid to replace outdated plaster of Paris crèches, immense inflatables, snowmen, cartoon characters, claim center stage on lawns.

But a blurry, early morning Advent communicant might, on her sleepy way to Mass, see nature-enforced genuflection in heaps of deflated plastic around some old concrete Holy Family: kneeling Joseph, blue-robed Mary, the Mystery in the manger.
