Tenebrae

by Diane G. Scholl in the April 2023 issue

After the foot washing, the singing and the plaintive prayers, host and wine, snuff the beeswax candles out to leave no brittle winding-sheet. Let no one speak the sharp edge of their grief tonight. Let no voice lift in praise or sorrow, no stones cry.

As light drains slowly from the evening's eye, strip the altar's purple gown.

Slam the book down.