Wingspread

by Paul Willis in the September 2024 issue Published on September 4, 2024

At Wingspread, the home designed by Frank Lloyd Wright for Herbert Johnson of Johnson Wax, the central dome is lit from above by circled rows of clerestory windows. Unfortunately, those windows leaked.

Once, during a thunderstorm, they dripped on the bald and shining crown of Herbert F. Johnson himself while he presided at the head of a dinner table lined with mayors and members of Congress. Herbert F. got Frank Lloyd on the phone and barked, What do I do? Wright said, Move your chair.

Years later, after the home became more or less a public place, one of Herbert Johnson's daughters, old and bent in a wheelchair, would visit of an afternoon just to hear percolations of silence.

-Racine, Wisconsin