The Other Side

by Sarah Rossiter in the February 2025 issue Published on January 29, 2025

The river wild, current fierce against my legs, feet unsteady, I watch fish rising on the other side, too far to reach, each cast, line snatched, fly dragged downstream.

Water deep between us, there is no crossing over, though I am old now; sometimes clouds part, sun striking trout who leap, translucent, into crystal air beckoning.