In the end,
what becomes of us,
we who saw more light
than others,
and still chose to turn
away from the cross?

 Shall we
 have a second chance
 to argue our singular case about how too much light often leads to blindness?

For in the end,
the light was never ours to master or deny;
there must be mercy for the fleeing souls that, fearing what the light revealed, chose shadows
over being whole.
